M1 International Business and Sustainability (MIBS)

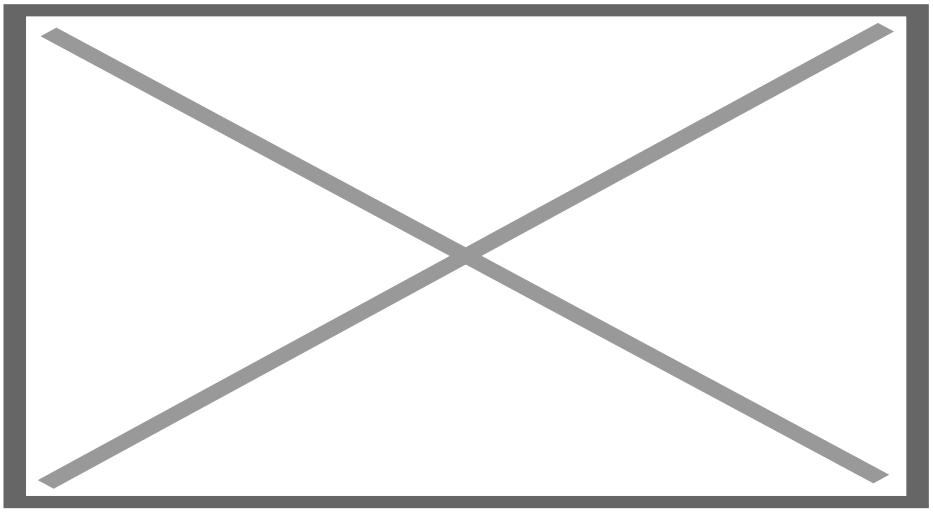

Master's degree
Specialisation Strategic Management
Language(s) of instruction
English

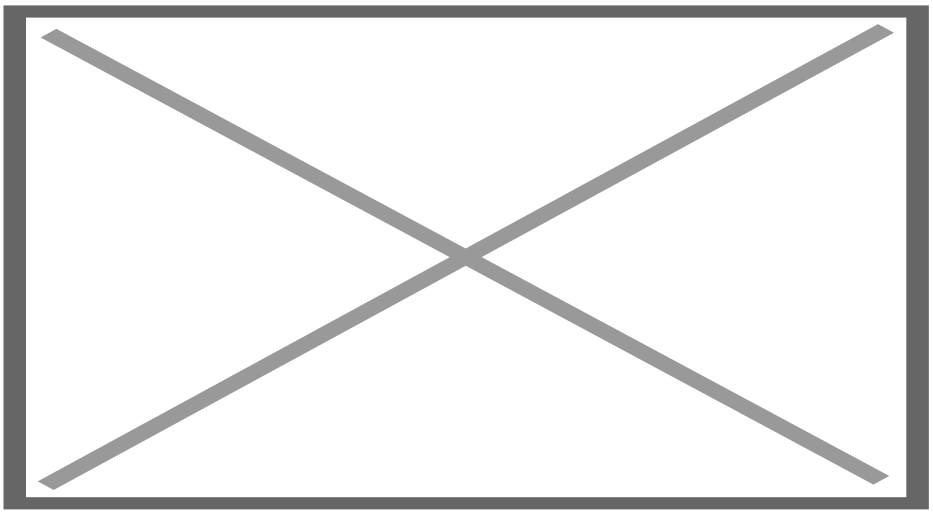

The Master of International Business & Sustainability (MIBS), taught in English, prepares professionals to work in a globalized context shaped by ecological, social, and technological transformations that no longer allow for “business as usual.” Benefiting from a strategic position within the University of Paris-Saclay, its academic networks, and corporate partners, MIBS relies on professional experiences that reinforce its relevance in the global job market.

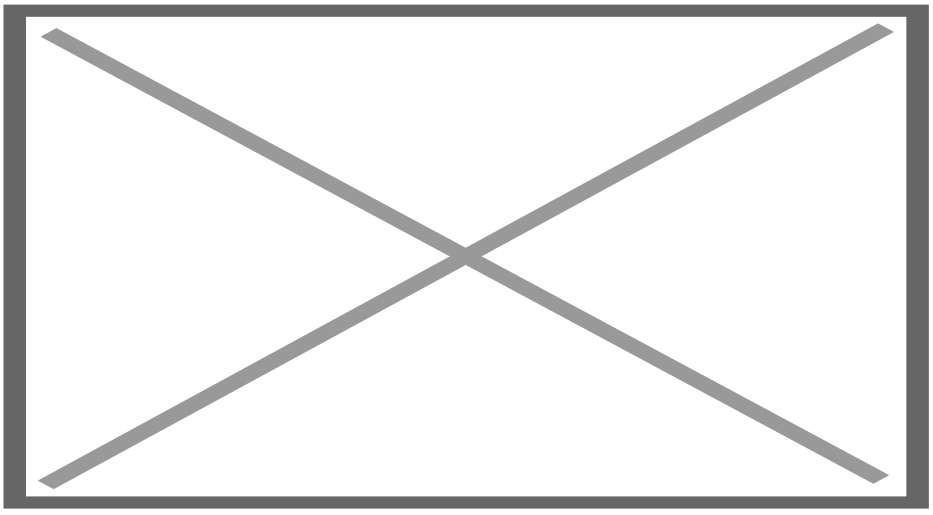

The MIBS program takes place over two years, structured around a Master 1 (M1) and a Master 2 (M2). All courses are taught in English, reflecting the program's international dimension. FLE courses can be organized with the aim of obtaining a French certification at the end of the master’s degree.

Présentation

Skills

The MIBS program allows students to develop in-depth expertise in several critical areas for international businesses. Graduates acquire a comprehensive understanding of economic, political, and cultural environments, as well as mastery of management tools and processes adapted to international markets. They develop skills in strategic and operational management, marketing, finance, and supply chain, as well as leadership, negotiation, and intercultural communication skills, essential for managing complex projects in multicultural environments. All courses incorporate challenges related to ecological, social, and technological transformations. M2 is organized into four major areas of expertise:

- Develop an internationalization strategy and lead its implementation in an evolving environment
- Manage multicultural teams and develop leadership capacity
- Manage transformation projects and processes
- Manage digital transformation and master its tools
- Develop and address an applied research question in international business

Objectives

The International Business & Sustainability program is designed to train executives and consultants specialized in the development of international activities, systematically integrating sustainability concerns into these activities. Within a truly multicultural learning environment, the program prepares students to understand and analyze the complex interactions between companies, markets, and international cultural and institutional environments.

The objective is to provide them with the concepts, methods, and tools needed to design and implement global strategies, lead multicultural projects, and adapt to the economic, geopolitical, ecological, and technological transformations of global trade. The aim is to develop:

- Good knowledge of business systems and processes at both strategic and operational levels;
- Strong understanding of the global business environment, and its recent major trends;
- Applied management skills in international settings;
- Comprehensive view of business functions (human resource management, marketing, operations, supply chain, and more);

In addition, the MIBS program provides students with cross-disciplinary skills such as excellent:
