This curriculum stands out from other curricula in foreign languages and civilisations on account of its bilingual approach, in a single- or dual-discipline curriculum with scientific orientations in the field of cultural and heritage studies.

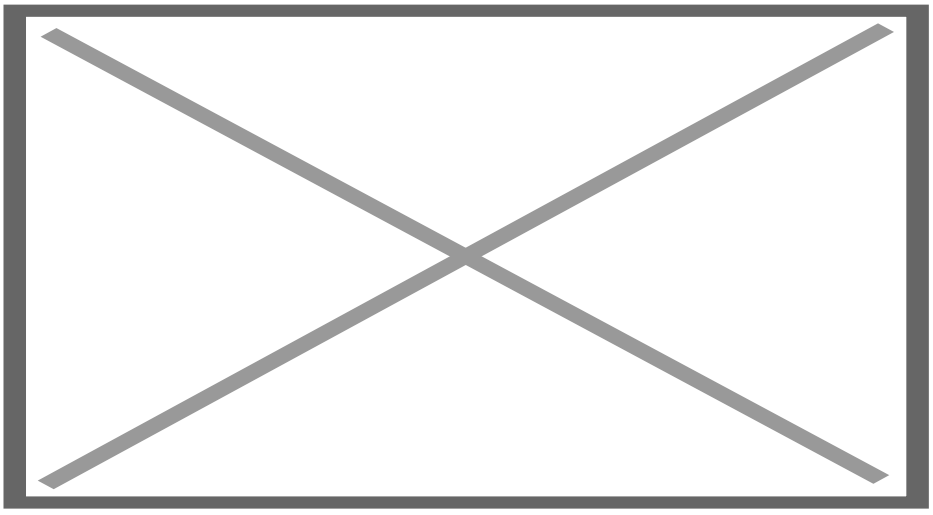

The Master ECMAH programme aims to train students in the methodologies of research applied to the cultures of English- and/or Spanish-speaking countries, and to familiarise them with the techniques of disseminating and promoting research, in either of the two foreign languages taught, English and Spanish. On completion of the course, graduates will be able to choose either to pursue research in English- or Spanish-speaking cultural studies, or to enter one of the many careers in language or international communication.
