Learning outcome targets

The aim of the GPLA Master’s is to train managers in the field of purchasing, particularly international purchasing, supplier relations, quality management and logistics. It also meets a growing demand from students for high-level training in international purchasing and supply chain professions.As a result, this vocational Master’s aims to train executives so that they are capable of resolving managerial issues related to the supply chain of public or private organisations. The training prepares students for the now highly internationalised professions in purchasing and the supply chain so that they can take on operational managerial responsibilities in the short term and strategic managerial responsibilities later on within a purchasing and/or procurement department. This training, offered by way of apprenticeship, is therefore intended for students wishing to exercise high-level responsibilities in private and public organisations which wish to develop on an international level by taking advantage of the opportunities offered by the globalisation of markets.
