

COPYRIGHT AND INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY

As the author of your thesis, you hold the copyright and you have full responsibility for the content of your thesis.

In order to best promote your work, please make sure to follow these guidelines :

Avoid plagiarism and cite your sources

Thus, you ensure that :

- your thesis is original
- your methods are ethical

This also allows readers to identify easily your sources

If you have articles already published or in the process of being published :

please check the publisher's policy on copyright and open archives at :

www.sherpa.ac.uk/romeo/ and <https://heloise.ccsd.cnrs.fr>

If your thesis includes figures, diagrams, graphs, images, etc. for which you do not own the copyright, you must get permission in order to include them.

Loi pour une république numérique (French Law for a Digital Republic)

If one or more parts of your thesis has been published in a journal, you have the right to make a preprint freely available in an Open Archive, even if you have given exclusive copyright of the article to a publisher:

- If your publisher has already made freely available the final version, you can in fact publish this version in the archive
- There may be an embargo period before you can publish this final version (up to 6 months from the date of first publication in the sciences, technology and medicine, and up to 12 months in the humanities and social sciences).

If 50% (or more) of your research has been financed by public funds (French or EU), Open Access deposit is not just your right but also a requirement of French and EU law.

You can distribute your work under a Creative Commons licence

It is in addition to your author's rights, and it specifies the conditions on which your work can be used and reproduced.
